This invention relates to a hologram recording medium and a hologram recording method. More particularly, the invention is concerned with a hologram recording medium and a hologram recording method which permit the data of a large volume to be recorded with high recording density and in a short period of time and which are suited for the recording of color hologram images. Hologram recording is a technique of recording pictures or images using the effect of diffraction of coherent light (a laser beam) by the interference of light beams to form a special pattern on a recording medium. The technique, in principle, requires three kinds of light beams; that is, a light beam for the formation of interference fringes, a reference light beam, and a signal light beam which is the object light beam. Two light beams are caused to interfere with each other at a particular location on the surface of a recording medium. In the prior art, the recordable hologram recording material has had a structure as illustrated in FIG. 1. This prior art hologram recording material comprises a substrate having a thickness of 0.5 mm or less. An alkali halide type optical recording medium such as an NaCl type is used as the substrate. On the substrate are provided a diffraction grating made of a photosensitive resin material and a photosensitive layer. The diffraction grating has, for example, a number of triangular-shaped protrusions (a number of fine slits) with a period of about 0.5 to 1.0. $\mu$ m and a height of 0.1 to 0.8. $\mu$ m. The photosensitive layer has a thickness of, for example, about 0.3 to 0.6. $\mu$ m and is made of a photopolymer. In recording on this prior art hologram recording material, the photosensitive layer and the recording medium are placed on a stage of the holographic equipment with the side which is opposite to the stage in use opposing the stage. On the stage are placed the reference and signal light beams. The reference light beam illuminates the photosensitive layer. The interference between
