In addition to the aforementioned API's, AutoCAD has a special XML format called "XML Paper" that provides a bridge between "paper" objects and drawing objects. For example, you can create a line object and automatically associate it with a "paper" object. CAD formatting conventions AutoCAD uses the Xref convention for referring to objects by their name. As the name suggests, the xref refers to an object by its XML identifier. For example, an object named "Workplane" is referred to as "Workplane" in Xref, regardless of its name on the screen. In AutoCAD, text is shown by using what is called a "symbol font", which is used for "soft" objects, e.g., text. AutoCAD uses "grids" or "structures" for laying out the drawing. A grid is essentially a 2-dimensional coordinate system that is used to place objects. Unlike "dynamic" grids in other CAD packages, AutoCAD supports the concept of predefined grids such as "Master Grids" and "Viewing Grids", and dynamic grids that are based on the zoom level. AutoCAD has the concept of predefined "layouts". For example, if a drawing is started with a specified layout, the objects that you create will be placed in the default shape and on a "paper" that is associated with that layout. Product Family AutoCAD 2014 is a package, consisting of several applications including: AutoCAD LT Autodesk DWG Viewer AutoCAD Map 3D AutoCAD Web App AutoCAD 360 AutoCAD 360 Mobile Subscription models Autodesk allows users to purchase a subscription model for AutoCAD.
