Essential oil is an important characteristic of plants and can be used for the development of new products. The aim of this study was to investigate the chemical composition and antimicrobial activity of the essential oil isolated from Ageratina adenophora aerial parts against Gram-positive and Gram-negative bacteria. The essential oil was obtained using hydrodistillation method. Gas chromatography-mass spectrometry analysis of the essential oil revealed the presence of α -pinene, myrcene, terpinen-4-ol, β -selinene, γ -terpinene, limonene, (Z)- β -ocimene, α -terpinene, δ -3-carene and (E)- β -ocimene. The oil also contained some sesquiterpenes: (Z)- β -farnesene, (E)- β -farnesene and trans- α -bergamotene. The oil showed antimicrobial activity against Staphylococcus aureus, Candida albicans, Escherichia coli, Pseudomonas aeruginosa and Klebsiella pneumoniae with minimum inhibitory concentration values of 1.21, 1.20, 1.21, 1.21 and 1.20 mg/mL, respectively. National Code for Unauthorized Use of MIT's Facilities The National Code for Unauthorized Use of MIT's Facilities is a standard of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), which covers the use of MIT's facilities without authorization. The Code is a revision of the MIT Code of Student Conduct, originally adopted in 1969. MIT uses different codes in its various institutions and academic programs. Some of these codes have generic titles and are intended for all campuses, but the National Code has a particular focus on MIT's policy at the Cambridge campus and is known as the Cambridge Code. The Cambridge Code differs from most other codes by having no prohibitions on certain activities, such as social life, and by granting greater discretion to the faculty, encouraging them to have greater respect for students and to treat them better than other codes would. The National Code is maintained by the MIT Office of the General Counsel and is the highest authority for all of MIT. It applies to all 79a2804d6b
